

Fashions and Whims for Woman's Fancy

THE summer girl is yet in the perspective—not in the dim distance, by any means, but just far enough removed to make us the more pleasantly anticipate her coming. A tour of the shops last week revealed the fact that only some advance styles had arrived—shadows, as it were, of coming events—and very plainly do these newcomers reflect the fact that the 1930 style is not on the wane. But now that we've got accustomed to big, full skirts, drooping shoulders and fluffy sleeves, every woman, or nearly every woman, is convinced that no more quaint or picturesque could she possibly make herself than by donning the gowns of grandmother days. No need to go to funny old fashion books, though, as some have been doing to get the real old touches for your summer gown. Look in the windows of our own home stores and find them all.

One gown there was on display that occasioned no little amount of comment, and those who missed seeing it are out a real treat. "Twas made of cotton mull with a real 1830 bertha and long shirred shoulders, with skirt sufficiently balloon-like to simulate hoops. This skirt is nothing more nor less than a deep flounce shirred very closely just below the hip line and finished around the bottom with broad, old-fashioned tucks—like those we used to see some twenty years ago." The bertha is banded in old blue and has a lot of hand stitches. A dear old gown that recalls the days of playing doll house and ransacking of the attic chest for "grown-up" dresses.

Another old-fashioned model was made of flowered organdy—spray and sprig pattern of years ago—with bertha and full flounced skirt; bell sleeves and mousseline undersleeves all prettily embroidered by hand. Insertions of Valenciennes lace were set in the bertha and between the tucks of the shallow yoke. Baby ribbon rosettes and loops made an effective finish for the front.

Two rather striking shirt waist suits were seen. Summer kinds, made of white cotton voile. The skirts were plaited close around the hips and flared very much at the bottom. One blouse was strikingly effective with bright red trimming of Bulgarian cross stitch and red four-in-hand tie. The other, just as much of a beauty, had Oriental bands on blouse and skirt for its adornment.

Now a word of the new weaves that have arrived for the making of summer dresses. Never have cottons and linens been so many and so varied. Some are costly enough, but many are moderate in price and will make up most effectively. Full skirts are the right and proper feature and will be worn the summer through and no trimming is so suitable to them as the narrow gathered trills of self fabric.

And here is one thing well to remember—you cannot possibly have too many fishbuses and tiny befrilled capes with the summer dress. They are a striking Advance Summer style of shirt waist suit. Made of Duchess voile; the stock, waist and skirt lapels are embroidered in red; Four-in-hand red silk tie. This same style is shown with bright color Bulgarian embroidery. Displayed at Keith-O'Brien's.

Handsome gown in the new box plait effect. The foundation—entire dress—is gray satin in gun metal shade. The skirt as shown has platings of fancy suiting fabric. Likewise the bodice—entirely of gray satin with platings set on. As a finish to the front an Oriental band of embroidery. Displayed by Auerbach.

A charming 1830 model. Made of cream cotton crepe. The full flounce is embroidered in old blue and has an effective tuck arrangement. The bertha is also embroidered in old blue and banded on the edges with this color. Shown at Walker's.

stead of inside, and fit the neck and shoulders mold-like.

And says this same letter—"macrame laces are to trim linen and canvas gowns." Delightful innovation, isn't it? You know one could easily make enough to trim a dress in a morning. But what a succession of tidies, mats, scarfs, etc., made in the years ago, fancy points to the mind's eye; enough to make one laugh when thought connects them with gown-trimming. So be it, though, fashion's way, not ours, be done. The prettiest pieces shown so far are in raised effects with deep pointed or scalloped borders, instead of the fringe of old. Fringe, however, is not to be tabooed and will probably come with the latter patterns. Very deep collars, quite cape-like are shown, also cute little boleros and yokes for waists and skirts. Here in New York it is considered smart, for all that it is made of coarse fish cord. Then, too, there is a new lace that any needle-woman can make—it is called the Hardanger. Very handsome and very popular, but tedious to make. The art books show illustrations of it.

Our store windows within the last week have taken upon themselves a very summerish look. Not a tailor suit is to be seen, save, perhaps, those labelled "traveling" for everything here is "westward, ho!" to the exposition. The summer frocks seem to be in two distinct classes. The youthful or those that verge on the tailerish and made of the heavier sort of fabrics—pique, duck, canvas, etc., and the dainty airy fairy kinds that will be seen fitting over velvety lawns and ornamenting verandas and halls of the luxurious and picturesque county home of which New York is lavishly possessed. Full skirts, very long shoulders, cape effects, berthas with long ends to hang straight or cross in the front and tie at the back are the principle "differences" over last year's gowns. Select any or all these and you'll be right as to modishness.

Frocks For Commencement.

With the approach of vacation time, the thought of commencement frocks is the one uppermost in minds of mothers who have daughters to dress for this auspicious occasion. The quaint old-time fashions evolved this season for grown-ups pervade the realm of smaller styles. The long shoulder lines, the many bertha effects, the full skirts are all very much in evidence upon garments of the misses' age.

But variety of fabrics, there surely is this year and which of the many will prove more favored, none can tell. "Tis said the charming and more than ever dainty colorings will make great inroad on the heretofore beloved white. No matter, though, which may be chosen, this one thing is sure—beauty cannot be missed. Just a word in this of some of the weaves shown in our stores.

In both white and tints there are the soft wash silks that lend themselves so beautifully to lace adornment. (Continued on Page Eight, Section Three.)
